

Congress of the United States
Washington, DC 20515

March 2, 2011

Ambassador Ron Kirk
United States Trade Representative
600 17th Street NW
Washington, DC 20508

Dear Ambassador Kirk:

In light of the preliminary report by the World Trade Organization (WTO) concluding that China does not have a legal right to impose export restrictions on various raw materials, we are asking that you move forward on the separate, but clearly related, situation regarding Chinese exports of rare earth oxides and minerals.

Rare earths are the key to technological innovation and the growth of green energy jobs. They are also critical to U.S. national security. Currently, the world is nearly 100 percent reliant on Chinese exports for these vital materials. However, China has been reducing its export quotas every year since 2006, and has announced a further 11 percent reduction for 2011. This reduction of exports by Chinese officials is intended to feed their growing domestic market – a market in many cases instituted to exploit this very same supply restriction, and then consciously maintained by it. Wide-spread reports indicate China is using the restrictions of exports as leverage to force high-tech companies to relocate to China. Even more brazenly, last September and October, China engaged in a de facto embargo against Japan and, apparently, U.S. importers in an attempt to seek retribution for other matters.

These export quota and embargoes are contrary to China's membership obligations in the WTO. The preliminary report on the 2009 complaint filed by the United States, Mexico, and the European Union indicates that the reasoning behind Chinese trade policy is as unacceptable to the WTO as it is to us.

A disruption in supply of rare earths could jeopardize national security, hinder our long-term efforts to achieve domestic energy security, and damage our world-leading high tech industries. While our nation must act to correct our domestic rare earth supply chain problem, we must also recognize that the lack of a level playing field for trade policy is harmful. Accordingly, it is in our best interest to vigorously pursue our options before the World Trade Organization related to Chinese rare earth trade policy.

We look forward to hearing from you on this, and stand ready to assist you in any way.

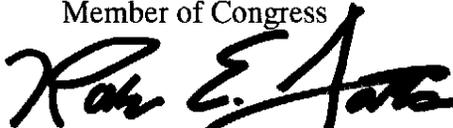

Sincerely,

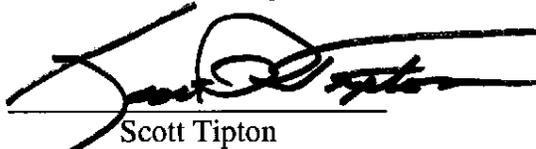

Mike Coffman
Member of Congress

Walter B. Jones
Member of Congress

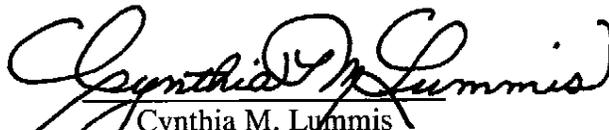

Robert E. Latta
Member of Congress

Scott Tipton
Member of Congress

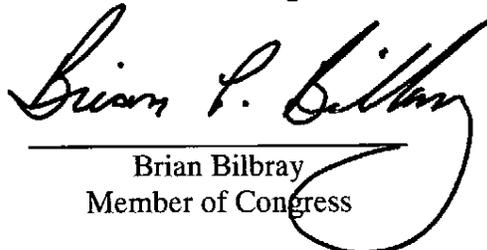

Daniel Lipinski
Member of Congress

Cynthia M. Lummis
Member of Congress

Roscoe Bartlett
Member of Congress

Brian Bilbray
Member of Congress

Dana Rohrabacher
Member of Congress

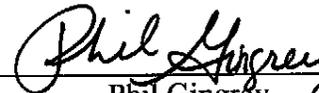

Rob Bishop
Member of Congress

John Culberson
Member of Congress

Trent Franks
Member of Congress

Phil Gingrey
Member of Congress

Peter Olson
Member of Congress

Joseph Pitts
Member of Congress

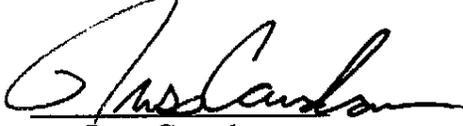

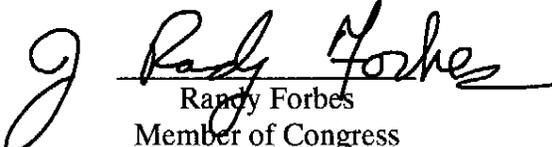

David McKinley
Member of Congress

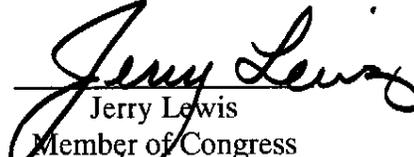

Robert Wittman
Member of Congress

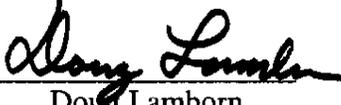

Joe Wilson
Member of Congress

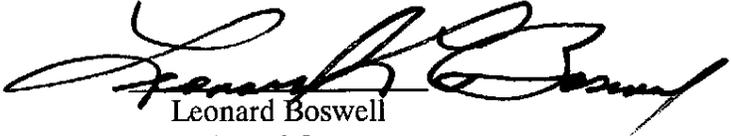

Todd Akin
Member of Congress

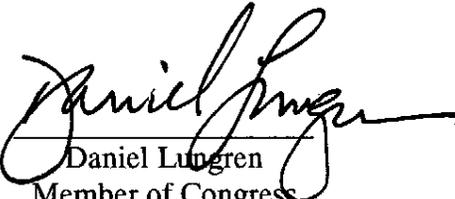

Russ Carnahan
Member of Congress

Randy Forbes
Member of Congress

Jerry Lewis
Member of Congress

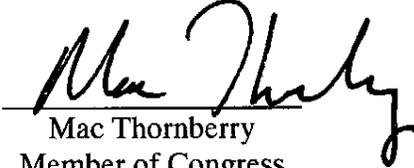

Doug Lamborn
Member of Congress

Leonard Boswell
Member of Congress

Daniel Lungren
Member of Congress

Thaddeus McCotter
Member of Congress

Cathy McMorris Rodgers
Member of Congress

Mac Thornberry
Member of Congress